carlier | gebauer is pleased to announce CORAZONADAS, Luis Gordillo's first solo exhibition with the gallery. One of the foremost artists working in Spain, Luis Gordillo's accomplished career spans over six decades. His distinct approach to the image is propelled by a metabolic impulse that appropriates and reconfigures a vast array of visual input, ranging from photography and comics to more traditional painterly techniques. The artist's abiding interest in psychoanalysis has shaped a complex and layered style of painting that builds worlds within worlds, encompassing multifarious and at times conflicting perspectives. "While I'm painting," Gordillo explains, "I have a feeling of perforating, of making holes. I'm asking myself what's at the bottom of this."¹ This layered approach to constructing an image, which curator Dieter Schwarz has described as a kind of mise en abyme, testifies to the depth and expansiveness of Gordillo's vision.

CORAZONADAS includes new large scale painting and mixed media works on paper. Typical of the artist's playful approach, which toys with replication and double-meanings, the term means both "of the heart" and to "have a hunch"—to make an assumption based on intuition. A commonality linking the works across diverse media is Gordillo's collage-like approach, which derives less from how he brings together different types of materials than his meticulous, complex constructions of pictorial space. With its layers of bold, interlocking lines, a painting on paper, Cabeza invertida (2019) exudes a centripetal force, pulling the eye toward the center of the composition. A related body of smaller mixed media works on paper, titled Conexión Transversal, impart a similar sense of dynamic energy and power. In ROBOT: ¡! Electrízame!! (2021/2022) pockets of organic forms are embedded within rigorous geometric constructions. The friction between hard-edged linear lines, softer scribbles, and undulating forms lends the painting both a sense of restraint and corporeal intensity.
